Children, Adolescents and Spirituality: Some Perspectives (Interface: A Forum for Theology in the World)

Childhood is a contested notion. Recent debates present us with a plethora of questions and concerns about how children fare in affluent societies. Are they losing their innocence too early? Are they propelled too quickly into the role of the customer? How can we protect them from a predatory corporate world? Are we too protective? Too risk averse in how we bring them up? In the midst of affluence and consumerism, are children over-indulged? Are they idolised? Such questions have elicited a range of responses from writers in this collection- theologians, researcher, teacher, principals and psychologists.
