This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1800 Excerpt: ... where marked the bloody progress of their armies. The subsequent events of this people have in part been already noticed under the last head of the historical sketch of the Mongoles, and the rest will be mentioned when we come to the account of the particular tartarian nations. One consequence of the tartarian subjugation was, that the name of this nation which hitherto, out of China and the Mongoley, had been unknown to the rest of the world, began now to spread itself in the western Asia and in Europe, and presently caused a complete interchange of victor and vanquished. In the later military expeditions of Tschibghis, the Tartars were by far the most numerous part of his army, as we are justified in concluding from the single circumstance, that in all the conquered countries which before had had their proper language, not the mongolian but the tartarian became the predominant tongue; as, in the leiser and the greater-Bukharta, among the Bashkirs and Tschuvaschs, in the Krim and in the Kuban, &c.--Nothing was therefore more natural, than that the incomparably greater number of the Tartars expunged the mongolian names in all the western countries: besides, wars undertaken in conjunction, a community of habitation, and one common ruler, were savourable to the commixture of the two nations, the vestiges whereof, however, upon the demolition of the mongolian monarchy, are so much effaced, that at present, excepting in a distant similarity of speech, the slightest relationship is no longer visible, even the lineaments of the face and in their political constitution, (that of the Tartars partaking more of the democratical, as that of the Mongoles does of the monarchical,) the two nations discover difference extremely characteristic, which is only less s...
